The Thompson Academy Hockey team had its best season ever, posting a record of 3 wins, 4 losses and 2 ties in a season that witnessed the Seahawk's first overtime victory as well as the school's first shutout victory in hockey. The Seahawk offense was led by high scoring Gino Sullivan (9 goals and 9 assists). Donald McGuire and Captain Bob Casey teamed up to form a hard checking defensive duo while Joe Dimaggio held down the net minding duties. Coaches Doug Paige and Bob Sullivan are looking forward to next season and the following returning lettermen: Gino Sullivan, Donald McGuire, Joe Stappen, Tom McClure, Bobby Mahoney, and John Cunniff.

THOMPSON ACADEMY

Thompson's Island

So. Boston, Massachusetts

02127 617 - 328-1884

Since 1812, Thompson Academy has remained unique among New England independent schools. Its setting on Thompson's Island, a 157-acre wilderness preserve located in Boston Harbor, has offered to its students a range of opportunity unmatched by any other American school. The school's proximity to Boston provides the boys with direct exposure to the resources of a large city, yet the island's removal from the mainland provides an atmosphere that combines a sense of adventure with sense of community.

The school's uniqueness lies in its variety of students from different backgrounds. Many of the boys have experienced difficulties because of problems in their previous environments. The goal is to give these students a chance to develop their potential in a comfortable learning environment. If they demonstrate their willingness to take advantage of the opportunities afforded them, they are welcomed. The Academy's aim is to show each student some measure of his own dignity and then to bring him as far as possible toward responsible and creative maturity with confidence in his personal capabilities.

The Island, the sea, and the city have combined to enable the Academy to pioneer a multi-phased approach to education. A casual college preparatory program enables accomplished students to enter the college of their choice. The Academy provides a general and a tailored program. The use of the Academy's precious wilderness is an integral part of the education.

THE ISLAND

Thompson's Island is a 157-acre island in Dorchester Bay. It was first settled by David Thompson who established a trading post there for the Neponset Indians in 1626. In 1634, the town of Dorchester acquired the island which was then turned into farm lands. In 1833 the Boston Asylum for Indigent Boys moved from a location in the city of Boston to Thompson's Island where a farm was maintained and improved for 130 years.

The present school complex consists of eight buildings: four dormitories with classrooms and living facilities for 120 boys, the gymnasium, Bowditch Hall, which houses the dining room, the infirmary and the administrative offices, Gardner Hall, which includes the school library and assembly hall, and a science laboratory building which also contains a complete woodworking shop. In addition to these structures, there are several other buildings that serve as staff housing and storage areas for maintenance equipment.

The athletic fields and buildings are located on a rolling plateau in the center of the island. The southern half of the island is mostly lowland, a considerable portion of which is excellent saltwater marsh. The tidal ponds and salt marshes are teeming with a wide variety of wildlife. Fish and clams, migratory fowl, and a great variety of songbirds feed in the marsh, which is extremely rich in nutrients. Open fields from the abandoned farm, several good stands of hard and softwood trees, and apple and peach orchards make Thompson's Island a most attractive location for the academy.

FACULTY

The Thompson Academy faculty includes fourteen full-time teachers, and a varying number of part-time counselors, aides, and technicians, each of whom is dedicated to the positive development of young men. Mr. John D. Pinto was appointed headmaster in June 1973 after serving as director of curriculum for four of his six previous years of affiliation with the school. A graduate of Tabor Academy and Columbia College, with graduate work at the Honeywell Computer Institute, and University of Rhode Island, and Boston University, Mr. Pinto is representative of most Thompson Academy faculty members. Many have had teaching or student experience in leading private boarding schools, all have graduated from superior colleges and universities (most with graduate degrees), and every faculty and staff member has fully demonstrated his educational expertise and commitment to compassionate teaching before being appointed to his position.

ADMISSIONS

Thompson Academy welcomes applications from ambitious young men of dependable character and proven ability. Application forms can be obtained by calling or writing to the:

Admissions Office
Thompson Academy
Box 127
Boston, Massachusetts 02127
(617) 328-1884

In order to afford each applicant's record a thorough evaluation, a health history form, a scholarship aid form, three recommendation forms, and a personal interview at the school are considered, in addition to the personal application form, by an Admissions Committee which includes the headmaster, the director of admissions, and three trustees of the academy. The Admissions Office is open from 8:30-4:30 weekdays, and interview appointments must be arranged in advance by telephone.

SCHOOL HISTORY

Thompson Academy is the fifth oldest independent school for boys in New England. The academy was founded in 1814 as the Boston Asylum for Indigent Boys, principally to "afford protection and support" to the sons of local families that had suffered from conditions brought about by the War of 1812, and were therefore unable to supply proper guidance or support to their pre-or early adolescent sons.

A number of philanthropic Bostonians decided early in 1813 to establish a "home school" for such boys to provide them with food, shelter, education, and direction. Descendants of many of the original funding families remain active members of the Thompson Academy Board of Trustees.

In 1832, a second, similarly oriented school was independently incorporated as the Boston Farm School, and Thompson's Island in Boston Harbor was purchased from the city of Dorchester for its setting.

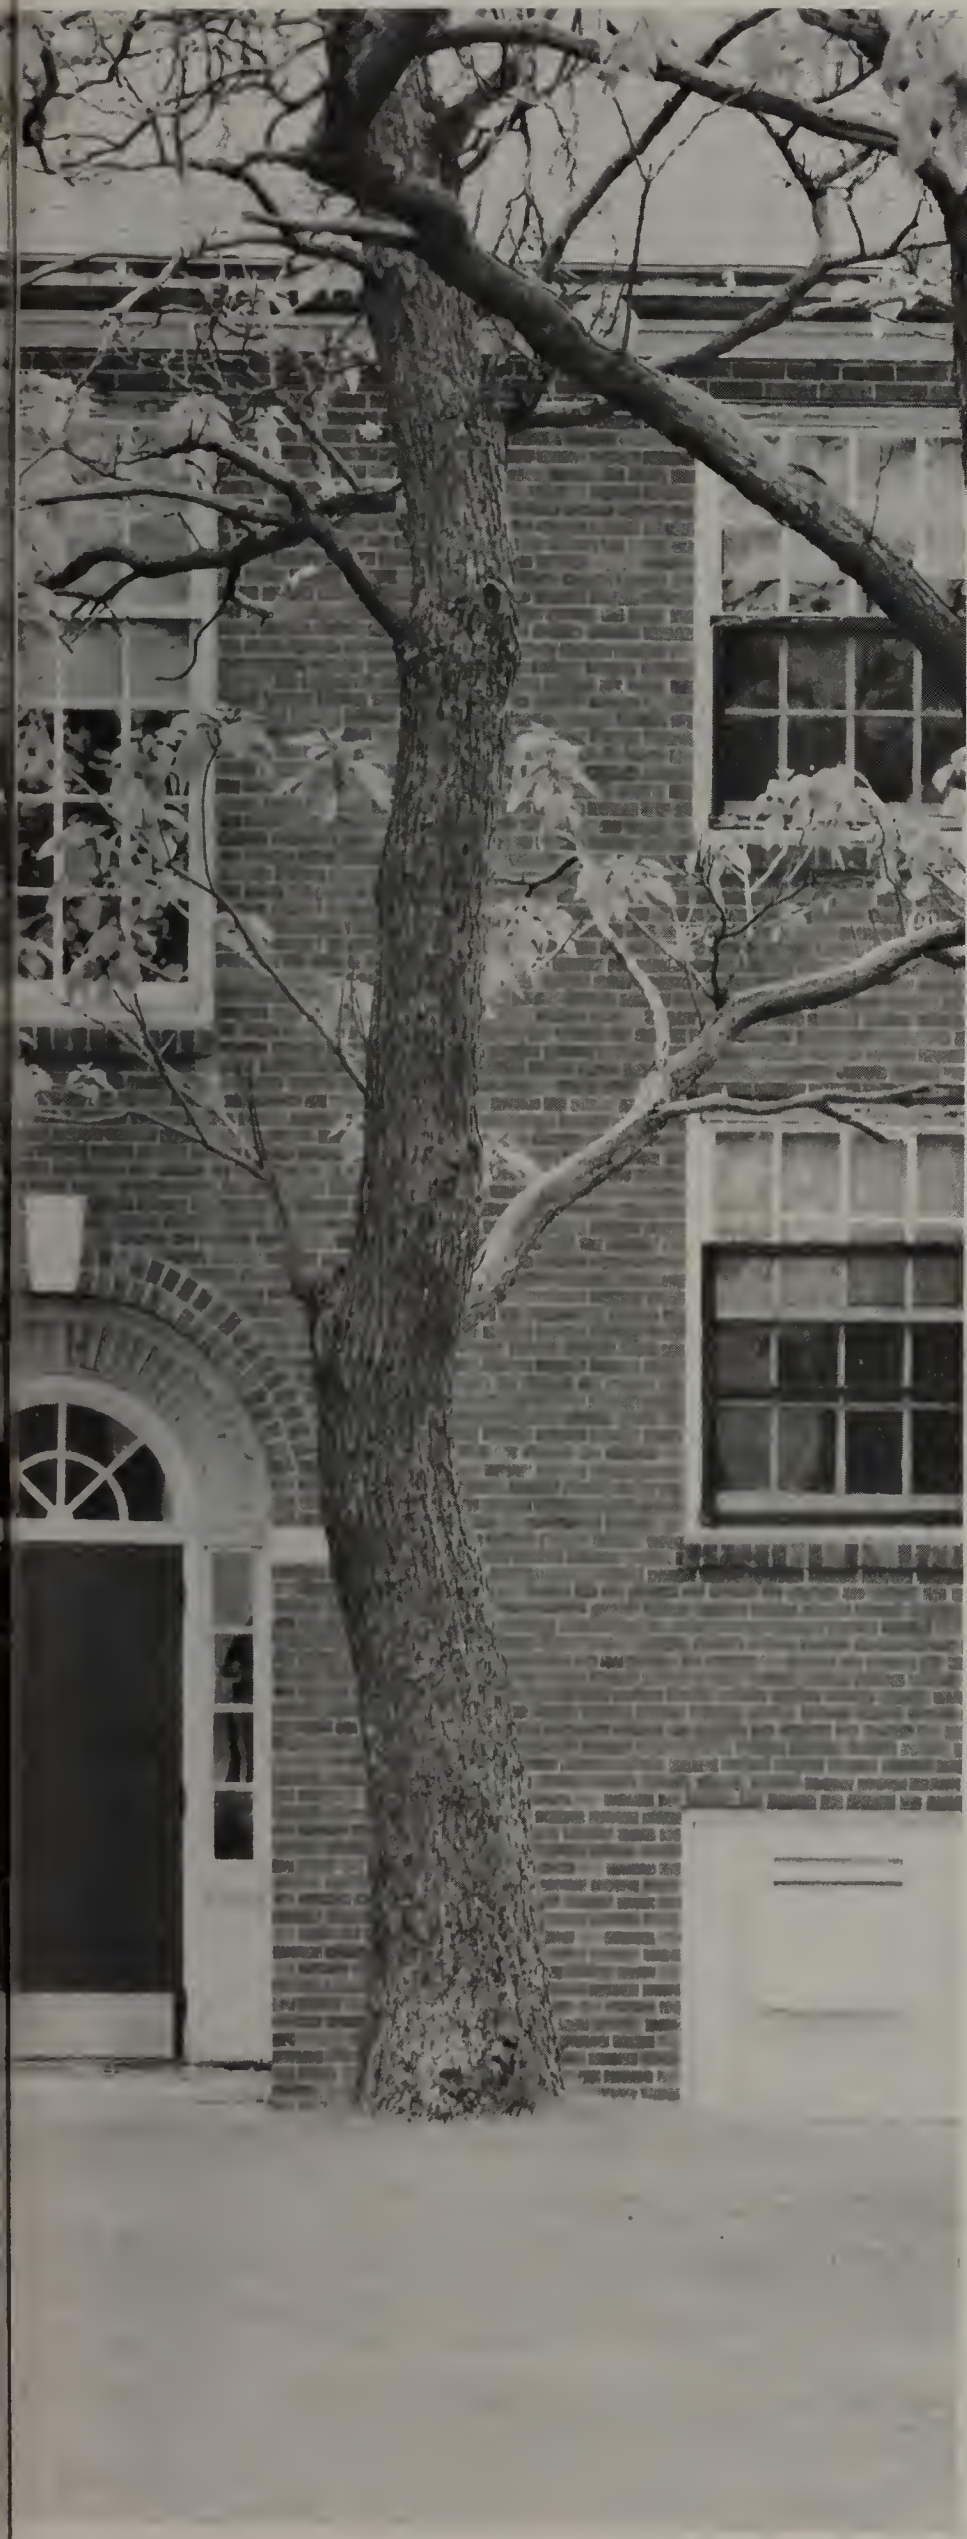

Because the objectives of the Boston Asylum for Indigent Boys and the Boston Farm School were much alike, and because the living facilities of the Asylum were becoming increasingly crowded in its single brick building in Boston's West End, a joint petition was presented to the General Court of Massachusetts for an Act uniting the two schools into one, the Boston Asylum and Farm School for Indigent Boys.

The assets of the former Asylum School were liquidated, and thus, a solid financial base upon which the new school would establish its future growth was provided. The new school continued to serve needy boys of good character and to provide a year-round home, academic instruction, and a thorough appreciation of manual and industrial arts and the principles of agriculture.

During the 19th century the school enlarged its campus, its combined academic/agricultural/vocational program and its student body and staff. In 1907, the school name was changed to the Farm and Trades School: however, the school's orientation and program remained unchanged.

One of the most distinctive extracurricular activities of the early Farm and Trades School had its inception in 1857. According to school historian Raymond W. Stanley, some 12 boys were casually amusing themselves one afternoon creating musical sounds through combs covered with tissue paper. They were soon joined by three boys with violins, and this group of 15 began to schedule informal meetings on a regular basis. In THE FOUR THOMPSONS, Stanley writes: "A bass violin, saxhorn, cornopean, and drum were added to form the nucleus of what became, the same year, the first school band in America." The Greek philosopher Plato suggested in the REPUBLIC that musical instruction for young people would impart to them an important sense of rhythm and harmony to broaden and to supplement a classical education. It was the boys of the early Farm and Trades School, however, that were to finally implement this platonic concept.

In 1956, The Farm and Trades School on Thompson's Island was renamed Thompson Academy, a titular change which both formalized and reflected a process of evolution that the school had been undergoing for some fifty years. The Farm and Trades School, as its name implied, had provided a practical training program which according to a 1947 school brochure, developed:

"... in each boy considerable skill in several of the departments of practical training with intensive training in one or two departments. These practical departments included printing, sloyd, carpentry, heating engineering, painting, glazing, electrical repairs, plumbing and steam repairs, cement work, floor care, building maintenance, farming, lawn care, shrubbery, tree pruning, shoe repair, laundry operation, clothing care, baking, vegetable canning, butchering, meat cutting, poultry dressing, office and messenger work."

Additionally, each student was required to complete a full curriculum of academic instruction. Typical school days included four hours of class work, four hours of work training, and four hours of play and recreation. Although demanding, the success of that vigorous program is yet attested to by hundreds of enthusiastic alumni.

By 1955, however, the Trustees of the School had determined that a disproportionately large number of then recent graduates had left the farm and shops on Thompson's Island only to find that their eclectic but somewhat obsolete skills were not so easily marketable as they had been in an earlier era. At that time, the Board of Trustees elected to change the name of the school to Thompson Academy, to extend the program to include the full four years of high school, to both modify and intensify the academic curriculum, and insofar as was possible to continue to introduce each boy to a variety of practical, manual skills.

The formula has been tremendously successful. The farm program ended in 1963 as a result of a disastrous fire which destroyed the main barn, much of the farm equipment, and some live stock. Several of the industrial arts courses—glazing, printing, vegetable canning, poultry dressing, etc.—were also terminated because of lack of training facilities and diminishing student and social interest. Yet, even as the academic curriculum became more and more geared to college preparation, Thompson Academy has continued to emphasize the importance of well-roundedness and manual skill development.

In 1974, each student is responsible for the execution of a daily work assignment. Some boys work on the school boat; others assist the chef with preparation and service of meals; while still others are engaged in various maintenance operations that range from custodial work to machine repair. In addition to a boy's work program, there is, of course, the opportunity to take formal course work in carpentry, sloyd, and auto mechanics. In effect, a modified version of the original study-work-play concept remains very much intact, and Thompson Academy graduates of the 1970's continue to be as manually capable as they are well prepared for higher education.

SCHOOL LIFE

PROGRAM OF STUDIES

Because Thompson Academy deals with students from such varied backgrounds, the school curriculum is designed to afford maximum individualization. The small class size, normally limited to a maximum of fifteen students, facilitates this policy. Courses covering a wide range of subject matter are offered in four forms—remedial programs, traditional college preparatory courses, dynamic team taught interdisciplinary courses and independent directed studies programs.

During the first week of school intensive testing identifies areas of strength and weakness for each student and provides a basis for course placement in the tailoring of individual programs in remedial and college preparatory courses. Equally important are the interdisciplinary, team taught courses which explore various aspects of some broad topic, allowing each student an opportunity to pursue a particular facet, contributing with other members of the class to an understanding of the whole. This approach is a proven method of encouraging motivation in students by involving them in the design and instruction of a course grounded in a problem of inherent interest.

Independent projects allow a student to pursue his special interests for academic credit under the guidance of a member of the faculty.

Traditional college preparatory courses include the following:

ENGLISH

Remedial English
Freshman English
Sophomore English
Junior English
Senior English
Advanced English

HISTORY

Civics

SCHOOL CALENDAR

The school year is divided into four terms. After initial testing and orientation classes run 8 weeks in each term. Grades and evaluations are sent at the end of the terms.

DISCIPLINE

Minor breaches of rules of the Academy will be punished by imposition of extra duties or detention at the direction of the Headmaster, faculty, and student government.

Thompson Academy is dedicated to building responsibility in young men. To this end a fair amount of freedom is afforded each student in proportion to his demonstrated ability to handle it responsibly. If, by his actions, a student demonstrates an inability to function productively in the Thompson Island community, he is subject to suspension and dismissal.

DONATIONS

Thompson Academy was incorporated, not for profit, in 1814, and the school has since remained privately endowed and supported. Each year, the Development Office appeals to a list of friends of the school, alumni, and parents for contributions. Additionally, charitable and educational foundations are periodically solicited for funding particular programs.

Gifts to the Academy are fully tax deductible and will be gratefully acknowledged. Checks should be made payable to:
